GSD Globecraft® Course on

CONFLICT & CLIMATE CHANGE

7-9 September 2009

Won't climate change now threaten world peace? This prestigious 20-hour advanced course educates world leaders who must use statecraft in the making of or influencing key decisions on war and peace.

Much has been written in recent years on climate change. Even more has been written, over the centuries, on conflict. Indeed, few subjects have been written about as much as has war.

Very little, if anything, is written of war and conflict as a consequence of recent climate change. This cutting edge, avant garde course now brings together two subjects that urgently need to be discussed in close conjunction. Is Darfur, for example, "the first environmental war"? Modern statesmen and women, if they are to lead effectively, need to be thinking about such issues. More, they need guidance, ahead of time, for real decisions they will have to face.

With history accelerating and with the rapidity of globalisation, world leaders are even expected to be expert in such matters. Yet, while they do not, in fact, need to become experts, they do need a very great deal more from our universities and think tanks. Without specific and tailored education and training, the quality of leaders' statecraft can only, inevitably, suffer. As a consequence, the many millions of people around the world who follow ill-prepared leaders will pay a heavy price.

The purpose of this Geneva School of Diplomacy Globecraft® Advanced Leadership Course is to enable world leaders to feel more knowledgeable, comfortable, and sophisticated about the hard decisions they must make when climate change and potential conflict stare them in the face.

For this intensive, 3-day roundtable, Geneva School of Diplomacy has brought together the finest, best-qualified professors in the field. In this short space of course time busy leaders from around the world will receive an over-view of the latest science on the origins of conflict and on the origins of accelerating climate change. Fully interactive, the Geneva School of Diplomacy Globecraft® Advanced Leadership Course on Conflict & Climate Change will produce a number of solutions and recommended approaches to current and emerging problems worldwide.

The roundtable will enable its participants to return to their high duties with a more sure-footed approach to the compelling and historic decisions ahead of them.
